

Nolan Erbele
Lewis and Clark

---

Gifted education means different things to different people. To me, gifted education means learning different things that I may not normally learn in school. My life has been improved by gifted education in so many ways: expanding my vocabulary, increasing my comprehension and improving my math skills.

Gifted education is important to me because it challenges me above and beyond the normal expectations of my classroom. My gifted education teacher has provided me with a safe and caring place to learn new things and discuss different ideas.

Without gifted education my school days would be too easy and unfulfilling. By participating in gifted education, I have expanded my knowledge in reading and math, as well as STEM activities. I have also learned to discuss and respect different viewpoints with my peers.